THINK HI-JACKERS FIRED MO., TRUCK

Fire Chief John Helenhouse of the Orland Park Fire Department received a telephone call about 7 o'clock that a truck was on fire on the Wolf Road south of the Fred Yunker farm. The fire truck was rushed out to the scene of the fire and found a Chevrolet truck and trailer in flames, but there was no one with the truck and no driver was found. The contents of the truck and trailer as well as all inflammable parts had been consumed by the flames. All that remained was the metal parts. The motor was not damaged. A Missouri license plate was found and it is hoped that the ownership of the truck may be traced thru this. It is thought that the fire may have been the work of hi-jackers.

What remained of the truck and trailer was towed to the Adolph Zerbs garage in Orland Park.

Tinley Woman's Club News

Two departments of the Tinley Park Woman's club, the American Home and Public Health and Hygiene, with their chairmen, Mrs. Cora Hoffman and Mrs. R. Bagby, had charge of the meeting held last Wednesday, Jan. 23rd, in the M. E. church. It was also guest day and among the guests were members of the Orland Park and Palos Park Woman's Clubs.

An exhibit, under the direction of Mrs. Cora Hoffman, was very attractive and splendid. Mrs. Hoffman also had charge of the luncheon which was served at 12:30 to about forty guests. The tables for the luncheon were decorated by the members of the Garden Circle of the Woman's club, and the following ladies were on the luncheon committee: Mesdames R. Bagby, W. The morning session opened at 11 a. m. and after the usual business session, Mrs. Lord, of the Milk Foundation and Mrs. Wilbur Fribble, of the Consumer's Council, both of Chicago, spoke. They were very interesting and gave much valuable information.

R. Henderson, third district chairman of Public Health and Hygiene; Mrs. F. B. Staley, State Chairman of the American Home department. Mrs. Francis Kedrow had two beautiful hand crocheted bedspreads on display. Mrs. A. Habenicht, Mrs. Wm. Lottie O'Neill Very Active In Legislature

Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill, representing the 41st District is really doing things for her constituents in the Illinois Legislature in Springfield. Having no political strings tied to her, Mrs. O'Neill can accomplish more than the party and pledge bound politician.

In recognition of over 6,000 persons in the 41st District Lottie Holman O'Neill has introduced into the General Assembly House Bill No. 23 which seeks to reduce license fees on passenger motor vehicles.

Interest on Small Loans
A call has come from many people to reduce the interest charges on small loans. This subject is included in the administration program and if required to get results Mrs. O'Neill will also introduce such bill.

Relief Resolution
The resolution introduced by Mrs. O'Neill, which unanimously passed the House last week is designed to call to account the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission. It requires that a list of all persons now in the employ of the Commission, with their salaries and addresses, for five years prior to appointment by the Commission shall be furnished each member of the Legislature, such information to be compiled by counties. Further, the Commission shall furnish to the General Assembly a representative of the Commission for personal questioning by the Committee of the whole House. This move is made in the interest of better and more economical administration of relief in the state.

Abolishing Senatorial Committee
On account of the dissatisfaction with the action of the Senatorial Committees in the last campaign, particularly in both major parties in the 41st District, there is a demand to abolish this group. It would shorten the ballot to some extent and do away with a group that has come to disrepute through its tendency to fix things for favorite candidates, or sell out its party. If no substitutes for the Commission is arranged all parties would try for the three seats in the General Assembly, and no attempt would be made to limit either party. This might not be desirable, but it is generally conceded that some change should be made in this section of our election laws. Possibly the county chairman should be given power to make this decision for the party. In any event the Senatorial Committee seems to have proven a disappointment by tending to confuse the voters and do too much fixing. The suggestions of the people as to a substitute will be welcomed by Mrs. O'Neill.

PETER DISCOVERS SNOWFLAKE

ROUGH BROTHER NORTH WIND hurried up one big cloud after another, and late in the afternoon white, feathery flakes came drifting down out of the sky. Peter Rabbit sat tight in the dear Old Briar Patch. All night he remained squatting just inside the entrance to an old hole Johnny Chuck's grandfather had dug a long time ago in the middle of the dear Old Briar Patch. Some time before morning the snow stopped falling and then Rough Brother North Wind worked as hard to blow away the clouds as he had to bring them.

When jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun began his daily climb up in the blue, blue sky he looked down on a world of white. It seemed as if every little snowflake twinkled back at every Jolly Little Sunbeam. It was all very lively and Peter Rabbit rejoiced as he scampered forth in quest of his breakfast.

He started first for the weedy field where the day before he had found Doty the Tree Sparrow and Slaty the Junco. They were there before him, not seeming to mind the snow in the least and having the very best of good times, as they picked seeds from the tops of the weeds which showed above the snow.

At once Peter discovered that they were not alone. Quite as busy seeking seeds as were Doty and Slaty was a bird just a little bigger. The top of his head and back were a rusty brown and on his back were streaks of black. Back of each eye and on each shoulder was a little patch of this same rusty brown. The inner tail feathers were black, and the outer half of the long wing feathers were black. Otherwise he was dressed all in white. It was Snowflake and Snow Bunting. Peter knew him instantly. "He knew that there is no other small bird who is so largely white. Peter had his usual question ready.

"Are you going to spend the winter here, Snowflake?" he cried.

Snowflake was so busy getting his breakfast that he did not reply at once. Peter noticed that instead of hopping he walked or ran. Presently he paused long enough to reply to Peter's question. "If the snow has come to stay all winter, perhaps I'll stay," said he. "I can't understand how folks can be contented where there is no snow and ice. You don't catch me going way down South. Why, when the nesting season comes around I follow Jack Frost clear up to where he spends the summer. I nest way up on the shore of the Polar Sea, but, of course, you don't know where that is, Peter Rabbit."

Peter confessed that he didn't. © T. W. Burgess.—WNU Service.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

HINTS FOR HOMEMAKERS

TRY adding a bit of grated lemon rind with the usual seasonings for pumpkin pie; it gives an added flavor.

In every well-furnished kitchen one should find accurate scales and measuring utensils, a pair of shears to be used only in the preparation of food; and since the success of a dish depends often upon timing its cooking or baking, a reliable clock.

When cooking squash, wash and scrub it well, then cut into convenient sized pieces to go into the steamer. Cook until tender, then scoop out the squash, mash, season with butter, cream, salt and a grating of orange peel. A small amount of sugar adds much to various dishes, fresh vegetables, meats and meat sauces. It accentuates the various flavors, binds them into a harmonious whole and enriches the color.

When starting out for a day of shopping buy or carry a small package of your favorite candy. When feeling ready to drop with fatigue eat a piece of candy and see how quickly you are pepped up. It will drive away that exhausted feeling and give you plenty of energy to carry on. Sugar is one of the world's greatest energy foods. The hundreds of pounds of candy that were consumed by Admiral Byrd's men during their long Antarctic winter will testify to its value.

A Turkish towel or piece of heavy outing flannel placed on the draining board or in the bottom of the dish-pan when washing delicate china will save many a treasured dish from breakage. The habit of so many dish washers is to place half a dozen fragile cups together in a pan of water and while floating around the handles are sure to be knocked off or cracked. With china as expensive as it is today, we need to use great care in handling it.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a drinking man, but my wife made me sign a pledge that I would not take a drink of whisky for one year. Gee! I'm dying for a drink. What shall I do?

Yours truly,

A. LUSH.

Answer: Buy a ticket for the Odion theater and go to see the show and at intermission it will be perfectly all right for you to take a drink. Your pledge is only for one year and the play you are going to see has two acts and three years elapse between the first and second acts.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

these three words together? Yours truly,

I. FLUNKED.

Answer: Your teacher was right in giving you a bad mark for connecting the three words HE AND PRUNES. The first book of English tells us that "prunes" is a noun and should only be used in boarding houses, while the word "AND," unlike an adverb is a conjunction. In your example you have used the conjunction "AND" to connect the word "prunes," which is a noun, with the word "HE." The word "HE" is a personal pronoun at all times, except when used for laughing purposes, like HE-HE-HE.

Pre-School Period in

Child's Life Important

In "The Little Red School House," written by Maxine Davis and reprinted from McCall's Magazine, Miss Davis writes: "We must overhaul our educational methods and make intelligent financial provision for it. If we do not, we will have a generation of idle, maladjusted, unhappy individuals who have no idea of how to live in a world of skyscrapers." And again she says, "the city found itself on the brink of bankruptcy. In making drastic economies it cut the total budget of the education department 40 per cent. In addition to a 20 per cent salary cut it closed all the kindergartens. . . . After this, the city's conscience troubled it. Had it done the right thing in its school economies? It asked the question of a committee of experts. 'No,' the educators responded. 'Put the kindergartens back. . . . It has been common practice to cut out kindergartens first. Yet it is acknowledged by laymen and educators alike that the pre-school period is one of the most important of the individual's life.'"

(Use what Doctors do)

Why do the bowels usually move regularly and thoroughly, long after a physician has given you treatment for constipation?

Because the doctor gives a liquid laxative that can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Ask your doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit—even in children. Your druggist has it; ask for—

WATCH YOUR KIDNEYS!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering impurities from the blood stream. But kidneys get functionally disturbed—lag in their work—fail to remove the poisonous body wastes.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains; feel "all worn out."

Don't delay! For the quicker you get rid of these poisons, the better your chances of good health.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They tend to promote normal functioning of the kidneys; should help them pass off the irritating poisons. Doan's are recommended by users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

"Now what have I done?" she demanded in mock terror, as they entered the enclosed porch gay with wicker and cretonnes and plants and colored lights.

"This is what you've done, Prue,—we'll get down to facts at once. You are the finest, the best sport of any girl I know—"

"Thanks for them kind words, but don't try to soften the blow. What have I done that makes you sit there looking as grim as an executioner and—twice as handsome?"

He refused to be diverted by her gaiety. "All right, laugh, but do you realize that you have made me appear to double-cross my best friend? Why did you tell Rod that you were engaged to me?"

"Did he tell you that?"

"Hold on now, sit back in the seat and listen. Something went wrong between him and me the afternoon you and your brother dropped in on us at High Ledges. I felt it but I couldn't get hold of anything. Then things got in such a mess that I put Rod's crabbedness down to worry over the lumbering. Remember when you collapsed the night of the fire?"

"Remember! Of course I remember. I never fainted but once before in my life, and when I think that I crashed when I might have helped more, mortification sends my blood pressure down, down, down."

"Don't worry about that. The ambulance surgeon says you may have a job with him any time you are ready for it. When you went to pieces that night, Rod nearly blew my head off because I left you. Your brother and the doctor were with you; I was needed somewhere else. I stayed, though."

"Martyr," Prudence jeered softly.

Not that she felt like being flippant, but to assure herself that her stiff lips would move.

"That night—or morning rather—when we got back from the fire the whole thing came out. You had told Rod that you were engaged to me, and he accused me of underhand methods, because the day I arrived at High Ledges he warned me that he intended to marry you."

"He did?"

"He did. Your eyes look as if they saw the coming of the Lord! Why did you tell him we were engaged? Don't answer. Tell Rod." He cleared his voice. "Promise me you will explain to Rodney Gerard; you owe that to me."

"Sorry to interrupt this twosome, Jim, but Prue's brother is looking for her," announced Rodney Gerard behind him.

Armstrong rose. "Great Scott, I had forgotten! This is my dance with the village beauty. Take Prue in, will you, Rod?"

Prudence made a vain effort to clutch his coat. At the door of the living room Gerard put his arm about her.

"Easier to dance through this bunch. Do you mind?"

She shook her head. His touch set little pulses in her throat hammering, the blood in her veins leaping, her body tingling with a fiery quality of life she never before had felt. He had told Jim that he intended to marry her! She looked up.

"I told you that I was engaged to Jim Armstrong. I wasn't. I don't love him a bit." Was that her voice, so pure, warm, and throbbing, or was another girl speaking?

For an instant his eyes flamed with amazement; then he crushed her to him savagely.

"Is that true? What a place to tell me! I can't—" He bent his head.

"Rod! Rod! Not here! Not—" Color rushed back to his face.

"Think I was going to kiss you? Didn't I promise I wouldn't until—"

A hand fell on his arm. A prosperous young farmer asked diffidently:

"Dance with me, Miss Schuyler?"

With a look which set Prue's heart clattering, Gerard relinquished her.

With the breathless sense that she was walking over a not too slumbering volcano, Prudence laughed and chatted with her partner when the music stopped. Mrs. Walter Gerard, in the latest in platinum metallic hairdressing and a smart black frock, bore down upon her.

"Dear Miss Schuyler, you are ravishing in that frosted green. It brings out your high color marvelously. You've been so kind to my darling daughter. She has a fascinating uncle, hasn't she?"

To Prue's indignant fancy the last sentence seemed to ring through the room as if magnificently amplified. Her response, she could not have told what it was, shook with anger. Almost she sympathized with Walter Gerard. How could a man live with a winking woman? She turned on her heel almost into the arms of Armstrong.

"What dastardly deed are you contemplating?" he demanded, as gaily as if the conversation in the sun room never had taken place. "Your eyes are spitting sparks, you look mad as a hatter."

"This is some party. Rod is doing himself proud. He and Jean are distributing gifts. He sent me to look after you. Come on, let's eat."

The middle of the long refectory table was banked with red roses; the supper was as varied and delectable as a noted caterer knew how to serve it. The guests' eyes were wide with admiration, their cheeks pink with repletion. Perched on one of the wide window sills, Prudence pretended to eat.

"How is the lumbering coming, Jim?" "It's a cinch. The two men who deserted to Calloway slunk back and asked for a job. We took one, but the crew rode Kusciko out of town."

"Why?"

"He dumped the truck of liquor."

"I suppose he was doing the dirty work of someone higher up."

"Of course—but he tried to knife Rod. That gets you, doesn't it? Here, drink this punch. It will bring your color back. Don't care much for old Rod, do you?"

"Who are you to try to probe the secrets of a maiden's heart?" Her eyes lost their laughter. "How is Calloway?"

"Better. He has made public confession that he was solely responsible for dumping that load of liquor in front of the cattle barn and that he will pay the bills. He did it to get even with Rod. When he found out that he was wrong—"

"He is such a just man," Prudence interpolated crisply.

"He is doing his darndest to be one now. He diverted the girder which would have finished Rod. I had turned away and didn't see it coming."

Prudence shivered. "That's the worst of the horrors of that lurid night. Oh, let's not think of it. I must find the Puffers. They probably want to go home."

As Prudence came down the broad stairs in her green velvet wrap with its broad mink collar, Rodney Gerard was waiting.

"Going? My party has been a knock-out, hasn't it?" The blue of his eyes was black, a hint of passion underlay the laughter in his voice.

"I don't like to talk about myself, but," Prue flouted gaily. "If only her heart would stop thumping, she wished wildly. 'You have immortalized yourself. Good-night.'"

She could feel the throb of his fingertips as he held the hand she offered.

"Are you sure Si is waiting? Then I will leave you and speed my other guests."

"He didn't say good-night!" Prudence told herself over and over, as she squeezed in beside Mrs. Puffer on the back seat of the automobile.

"Foolish for your brother to drive home alone," Si protested, as he started the car. "Whatta mean is, he might have come along with us. But perhaps there wouldn't be room. I'm always forgettin', Mother, that you're not so slim as you were in the days when you and I went to the circus."

"The circus! That reminds me, what happened to Milly Gooch?" Prudence inquired.

Mrs. Si drew a long, troubled breath. "She went to pieces the night of the fire, dearie. She had hysterics hanging on to Roddy Gerard—guess if folks hadn't been scared to death thinking where those flames might go there would have been some whispering."

"'Twouldn't have lasted, Mother. Len Calloway's confession brought out the whole story of how Roddy'd helped her. Walt Gerard had better not set his foot in the village or he'll be tarred and feathered."

"Here we are at your door, Miss Prudence."

Prudence lingered outside the red brick house. Moonlight silvered the dormers. How low the stars seemed! They were like gold dust spangling indigo velvet.

David was standing before the fire, an arm on the evergreen-banked mantel, when she entered the living room. He smiled as he met her eyes. Thank heaven, he could smile.

"I'll call this a day," he said. "It is so long since I have stepped out to an evening festivity that I am tired."

"Oh, I thought we would talk it over before the fire, David. That's half the fun of a party." She slipped her hand under his arm and laid her cheek against his sleeve. "Of course you are tired, dear. Go to bed. I will lock up."

"I want to be full of pep tomorrow. Gerard is having a big tree for the crew at the bunk-house, sort of a house warming." His arm tightened about her shoulders. "No matter how dark and problem-logged the path, Prue, you bring life and gaiety and courage in your train."

"Why, Dave! Dave!"

Prudence hid her quivering lips against his shoulder. His praise brought her heart to her throat. He laid his hand tenderly on her ruddy hair.

"Didn't expect your staid old brother to go sentimental, did you?" He laughed. "Well, that's my story and I stick to it. You're stunning in that frock, Prue. Good-night, dear."

"Good-night, good-night, beloved," she hummed in a husky undertone as she watched him cross the room.

She started to bank the fire, threw on a log instead. She was wide awake, she couldn't sleep if she went to bed. She curled up in the wing chair. Why hadn't Rodney said good-night? Perhaps just as she had discovered that she adored him, he didn't like her any more. Why should he? She had been bitter and hateful. Now that love for him had slipped into her heart and taken absolute possession, it had given life a new value, given her a new insight into her own needs and shortcomings.

A vine outside tapped icy fingers against a window. A shutter rattled eerily. The fire purred. Her thoughts raced on and on. The banjo clock wheezed and ponderously struck the hour.

Prudence counted. Midnight. How still the world was! What would old Santa say if he caught her sitting up for him? Silly, what a kid she was! Perhaps that was the reason Rodney didn't like her any more—Someone was watching her! Who had come in? She glanced furtively at the long mirror. Her heart stopped. Rodney!

He didn't move. Was he real? Her fascinated eyes clung to his in the mirror. How he had changed since the day she had plunged into his arms in the barn! Determination and the will to grapple obstacles had remodeled his mouth; where it had been sensitive and mobile, it now set in a grim line. She had thought it too boyish. Now its sternness was like a knife in her heart; she didn't want life to hurt him, she couldn't bear it. Was she partly responsible? What would his mother think of the change if she knew? He moved, and the spell was broken.

"Merry Christmas, Prue of Prosperity farm!"

She stood up and caught at the back of the wing chair. The guarded ardor of his eyes took her breath; his mouth was no longer stern, it was young again.

"Merry Christmas, Rodney."

"Don't look at the clock. This isn't late for the night before Christmas. Had to get the collar for the kitten. I've left him in a basket in the hall. Planned to put him in Jean's stocking in the morning. Dave okayed my coming."

Was that why her brother had been too tired to stay downstairs? The light in the eyes watching her seemed to get in the way of her breath. She proposed eagerly:

"Come into the shop. The collar is ready. I—I—thought perhaps you had forgotten it."

"Oh, yes?" he responded enigmatically, and followed her with the rustling basket in his hand. Prudence picked up the collar from the bench.

"Take the kitten out and hold him tight while I put it on. There! Do you like it?"

"It's great!" With the squirming kitten clutched in one arm, Rodney seized her hand and held it against his lips.

"Darling, did you think I would go through this night without a show-down with you? I kept away after that dance. I didn't dare trust myself. Why did you tell me you were engaged to Jim Armstrong? Why—"

The kitten squirmed and clawed and jumped. He sprang to the back of a chair. Contracted to a black ball. With a bound landed on the high top of the bookcase. His green eyes turned ruby red as he peered over the edge. The man and girl stared back at him.

"Darn! Stop laughing, Rodney Gerard, you'll waken Dave and bring Jane Mack down on the double-quick for another burglar," Prudence warned in a hoarse whisper.

"Get that cane in the corner and poke the kitten down. The black imp! Perhaps you can reach him if you stand on something."

Gerard balanced precariously on the arm of a chair and poked vigorously. At each thrust the quarry retreated. At the imminent risk of breaking his neck—if not the kitten's—Gerard lunged with the cane.

"What the dickens is going on here?" David Schuyler demanded from the threshold, as he knotted the cord of his broad dressing gown. Jane Mack, still in her glittering black frock, peered over his shoulder. Gerard jumped to the floor.

"That snooty kitten walked out on us."

"Oh, was that it? Macky and I thought you had corralled her burglar at last."

Jane Mack twisted gnarled hands. "I was the real burglar, Prue," said Rodney. "I had asked Miss Mack to get the emerald and diamonds for me because—"

Jane Mack eagerly interrupted him. "Mr. Rodney didn't want you to know he had them. I sneaked 'em from the safe that morning you caught us three coming out of this room. Mr. David knew about it. Every time you took out those packages I nearly lost my mind for fear you would miss the emerald. Finally I couldn't stand the strain any longer, so I just worked up that yell and burglar story, to account for them not being there."

David Schuyler slipped his hand under Jane Mack's arm. "Come on, they don't need us, Macky. Gerard is the only one who can explain." He looked back and smiled as he crossed the threshold. Prudence waited till the voices on the stairs were still, before she asked:

"Why did you want those stones?" "Rodney Gerard held out his hand. On the palm glittered a ring.

"Grandmother's emerald! Set in my design! What marvelous baguettes! Why did you do it?"

"Is it splashy enough? You said you wanted the stones set, didn't you, —Gorgeous? I would like all my life to give you what you want. You know I love you, don't you? You know that I've been mad about you from the moment I held you in my arms in the barn. Why did you tell me you were engaged to Jim?"

He dropped the ring to the bench and caught her shoulders. "Don't turn away. We'll fight it out if I stay here all night. Answer my question."

"I didn't want to love you."

"Why—because of Milly Gooch? Calloway told me that he had poisoned your mind against me. There was not a shred of truth—"

"Please—please don't tell me that. I know it. In my heart I have always known it."

The whiteness of his face frightened her. His ardent eyes confused her. She touched the ring.

"Now that the emerald is set, what are you going to do with it?"

Color rushed back into his face, youth and gaiety and laughter to his lips.

"Watch me, Gorgeous, just watch me while I make my wish come true!" He caught her left hand and slipped the ring on the third finger.

"All right with you? This means marriage, you know—for always."

"For always," she whispered.

He looked at her without speaking. His eyes seemed to draw her heart from her breast. She pressed her cheek against the gardenia on his coat, and challenged with unsteady gaiety:

"Something tells me that you are letting that silly promise—"

He crushed her so close in his arms that she had barely breath left to add:

"Don't you usually kiss a lady when you ask her to marry you? Perhaps, though, it isn't being done—perhaps—Rod!"

The quickly smothered cry, half laugh, half sob, roused the dozing kitten. He peered over the top of the bookcase. Yawned. Sneezed. Mewed ingratiatingly. As neither girl nor man looked up, he jumped to the high back of a chair. Always with watchful green eyes on the two humans by the bench, the amber pendant on the silver collar glowing, he proceeded to remove the dust from his sleek black paws.

[THE END.]

First Butter-Makers

Butter is one of the boons bestowed by accident upon the world. The story goes that, long ago, Arabs used to carry sour milk in leather bags with them on their journeyings across the desert. They traveled by camel, and the movement of this beast is worse than that of many ships. The result was that the milk was converted into butter, which was first used as a lotion for the skin. When the demand grew, the bags of milk were tied to swift horses which were made to gallop about for some hours. Finally came the first churn, and butter-making became an industry.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

The Word "Itasca"

Itasca is a coined word, invented from the two Latin words veritas and caput. The inventor took the last four letters of veritas and the first two of caput, making Itasca. Veritas caput means true head. Lake Itasca was considered the true head or source of the Mississippi river.

RUG WELL NAMED "BED OF ROSES"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The original rug shown measures 44 inches and requires four pounds of rags to complete. It is braided with three strands, but can be crocheted. A crocheted rug has better wearing properties. Many colors are used in the following combinations: Center circle in white, yellow, red, and black. Three of the outer circles in various rust shades. The other three circles in two shades of blue, and yellow. Outer edge is rose, yellow, black.

This rug shows that beautiful rugs can be made of rags. The regulation or common rag rug is either round or oval, with various color combinations, and when finished has no particular beauty. In making the above "Bed of Roses" rug, make seven small round rugs about twelve inches in diameter, and set together as shown here, then work rows all around to size wanted. It's a different rug and only another idea of what can be made of rags.

The best material for making rag rugs is "Linkraft." When using this new material no cutting or matching of sizes is necessary. Linkraft is a round knitted material like jersey. It comes in links about five inches long, but stretches to about nine inches when linked together. These links are to be linked together in solid colors or mixed as desired. Linkraft is very durable, does not fray like rag strips and Linkraft rugs weigh about 20% less than rag rugs.

If you are interested in making rag rugs, send for Grandmother Clark's Book No. 25 on Crocheted and Braided Rugs. Twenty-six rugs are illustrated, with instructions. A wonderful selection to pick from when having a good-looking rug in mind.

BUILD TO COUNTERACT SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

In the Daily Worker, the central organ of the Community Party in the United States, under date of December 13th, we find that the "Young Communist League" is now busily engaged in the establishment of so-called "Workers Schools" in Washington, D. C. We quote a paragraph from this publication:

"Forward to a mass movement of workers' schools—every Young Communist League member a student. Make the Y. L. C. a genuine school for Communism."

Certainly these few examples present concrete evidence of the fact that there is a need for an extensive program of Americanism at this time.

Legion builds for future.

As a means of combating this ever-growing menace, the American Legion has interested itself in various Youth activities to build a solid foundation of citizenship training in our boys and girls, thus insuring the future of America. In this particular field, every post of the Legion this year is intensifying its activities in cooperation with the Boy Scout movement; to support to the fullest extent the Citizens Military Training Camps, and the R. O. T. C. movement in schools and colleges; to enroll a greater number of boys in junior baseball; to cooperate with the National Youth Week Committee in the promotion of National Youth Week; to organize junior rifle and 4-H clubs; to work in close cooperation with the girl scouts, the Girl Reserves and Camp Fire Girls; and to organize as many new Squads of the Sons of the American Legion as possible.

Certainly these various Youth activities merit the full support of every citizen, as well as the American Legion, if we are to build better Citizenship among our boys and girls. And the Legion feels that by an extensive educational program, and by the promoting of these different Youth activities, we can best combat these subversive groups.

CHILD WELFARE

Our Nation advances only to the extent that our children excel their parents. If we neglect the welfare of our children what then may we expect of our future Nation?

The founders of the Legion have been thoughtful. They have tried to look into the future that our children may profit by the mistakes of the parents. To us the future of our children is as important as their education is to the State and Nation. Upon their ability rests the future history of our accomplishments and our deeds of the past.

It is fortunate, indeed, that we of take more interest in our children the American Legion have begun to as the years go by. We have tried and are succeeding, in developing their ambitions as those ambitions will eventually develop into realities, realities that may mold our entire future structure of government and economics.

Let us, then, not be inclined to look upon our child welfare problems too lightly. For the present the child needs our help. In the future we shall perhaps need theirs.—Ludwig Rich in Taylor Topics, Chicago.

Many are the stories told about the care General Smedley D. Butler always took in looking after the welfare of the men in his command—especially as regarded their food. One relates that when he was in command of Camp Pontenazen, France, he met two soldiers carrying a large soup kettle from the kitchen.

"Here you," he ordered, "let me taste that!"

"But, Gen—"

"Don't give me any buts—get a spoon!"

"Yes sir!" the soldier replied, and ran back in the kitchen and brought a spoon.

The general took the desired taste and gingerly spit it out.

"You don't call that stuff soup, do you?" he shouted.

"No Sir!" replied the soldier.

"That's what I was trying to tell you—it's dishwater, sir!"

TINLEY PARK

T. Y. O. —Girls

The first regular business meeting of the T. Y. O., girls, was held Monday January 28. Eight members were present and their sponsor Mrs. Pearl Boldt. Election of officers was held with the following results: President, Fern Fulton; Vice-president, Ruth Freitag; Secretary, Valerie Rice and treasurer, Loretta Hick.

Any highschool girl between the age of 14 and 20 can be voted into the club. Regular meetings of this club on Thursday nights at the club house.

The Tinley Park R. N. A. Camp sponsored a card and bunco party at the school auditorium Wednesday night. A very large crowd was present. The proceeds were turned over to the school benefit fund.

Henry Bechstein who has been ill for sometime, is much improved. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Hoffman left Wednesday for their new home in Tulsa, Oklahoma. They have been residents of Tinley Park for several years.

Mr. and Mrs. John Swisher received a telephone call from Ann Harbor, Mich., last Friday night advising them of their son Dick, who is attending the university there, being ill with appendicitis.

The postmasters of this section recently formed a Postmasters Association of the third district. The officers are: President, Geo. F. Sutton of Harvey and secretary, Thomas G. Tierney of Homewood. The members of the new organization enjoyed a banquet at the Calumet Country Club following the perfection of their organization.

The past week has shown renewed activity in local real estate. Two houses in the Elmore south subdivision have been sold and two more houses rented. A new house is also under construction.

The Elmore Poultry Co., report a very big demand for their choice graded eggs. The demand is greater than can be supplied.

The village board will hold their regular monthly meeting next Monday evening.

The Lake-Cook Feed Co., a subsidiary of the Cook County Farm Bureau, have completed the erection of two large gasoline storage tanks in connection with their new feed store, south of the Rock Island depot.

Farewell Musical-Tea For Mrs. Floyd Hoffman.

Last Saturday afternoon, in the beautiful and spacious home of Mrs. John Boeyer in Tinley Park, the members of the Tinley Park Woman's Club gathered, in response to an invitation, issued by the hostesses Mrs. Boeyer and Mrs. Wallace Butler Combs, to a musical-tea, in farewell tribute to Mrs. Floyd Hoffman, who moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Mrs. Leah Winsor opened the program, playing "Prelude" by Chopman, and "Second Mazurka" by Goddard. Mrs. Winsor showed her musical ability in the splendid execution and interpretation which is her's, in the playing of these two selections.

Mrs. Boeyer, in her sweet mannerism and round full tones, sang, "Sunny Beams" by Schuman. Mrs. Frank Baldwin pleased the guests, by playing two medleys of popular tunes, and showed her music ability, especially of the ear, since she does not read a note of music. Mrs. H. Boldt gave a reading of a story as told by a wife and husband. Mrs. Combs in well chosen words, addressed Mrs. Hoffman, telling her of the esteem in which her friends held her; of their regret of having her leave this community, but wished God's blessings to go with her and her family and hoped the world find joy in her new home. Mrs. Hoffman responded graciously and then all sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" to the piano accompaniment by Mrs. Fred Goebel.

During an intermission of the program, tea was served in the dining room, from a table laid with a yellow linen cloth centered with a gold candelabra holding seven yellow lighted candles. Mrs. Combs and Mrs. Boeyer poured.

T. Y. O. Tattlers

The last meeting of the Tinley Youth organization was held Monday evening Jan. 28 in the new club rooms. This was the second meeting in the club rooms. The other was held Jan. 4. The boys can play ping-pong, cards or box.

Haven't heard much from the roller skating party committee. Must be oiling the wheels.

"Buy Illinois" Says Director of State Agricultural Department

DURING the World War all patriotic American citizens decreased their consumption of the food products of which there was a shortage—white bread, butter, sugar and so on. Now in this depression crisis it seems to be just as much a patriotic duty for several years put this theory into practice. Actually Illinois apple orchards bear just as abundantly (more abundantly in fact) and our own girls are just as beautiful as the Michigan blossom queens.

However, unlike the war-time condition when doing without certain foods was a real hardship, today, using more of these surplus products is not a difficult task but simply means eating more of the foods most people like anyway—and need for health—for among Illinois' leading food products are what nutritionists term the "protective foods"—the ones that for the best health must be included in diet, no matter what else is eliminated.

Illinois Produces "Protective Foods."

These protective foods are: milk, fresh fruits and vegetables and eggs. Milk, which heads the list of Illinois' home-produced foodstuffs, is always pleasing as a beverage and necessary in preparing attractive cooked dishes. And it happens conveniently that Illinois' chief fruit and vegetable crops are among the most popular—corn, potatoes, apples, peaches and grapes. Corn, especially when served on the cob, is one of our most popular and typical American dishes; few of us would go through a day without eating potatoes; and apples, peaches, and grapes are among the most luscious of our fruits, each so different in flavor that if one does not appeal the other must.

Director McLaughlin will show how individuals can accomplish three things by using Illinois' chief products—improve their own health and appearance; economize on their food bills, and last, help the farmer's economic condition, which will in turn react favorably on their own.

to increase the consumption of those foodstuffs of which there is now an oversupply—a condition which is one of the factors that is holding us back from progressing out of our present state.

In succeeding articles in this paper, W. W. McLaughlin, the Director of Agriculture of the State of Illinois, will tell you just how individual citizens can help the Illinois farmer back to prosperity by using more of his chief food products. Many states already realize the necessity for promoting their own products. For example, Michigan with its fruit blossom fea-meetings, but the darn thing began to eat up our stationary.

The witty Bill C. suggested the idea to raise money by planting pennies and getting half-dollars!

One of the quintuplets seems to have engaged in a little fight Saturday nite with a 21 year old boy. Pretty good for the husky little youngster. It seems that Lehman and Gotham enjoy running up hills. Especially at Lemont. What's this about Bob C. and Casey, also Frankie and Maggie? More next time.

at His Best in

"Golden Dawn"

Peter B. Kyne, that famous writer of absorbing fiction, tells a thrilling tale of love and mystery in GOLDEN DAWN, which will be published as a serial in this paper. GOLDEN DAWN, like all of Peter B. Kyne's stories, has the characteristic of appealing simplicity, and the human quality which endears a writer to his readers. Perhaps that is because Kyne had behind him a long and varied experience of life before he ever turned his hand to authorship.

He was born in San Francisco where, working in the wholesale lumber and shipping business, he obtained the material which he afterwards used in the famous "Cappy Ricks" series. He fought in the Spanish-American war, seeing much action in the Philippines. In the World war he was a captain of artillery.

With such a background and with a wide knowledge of people gained by rubbing elbows with them all up and down the world, Peter B. Kyne is enabled to write the sort of stories those same everyday people enjoy. In this story of a girl who was really two girls, of her lively adventures and her rescue from the mental shadows by an engaging young doctor, Kyne is at his best. This story has love and mystery, humor, suspense, surprise—and above all, ACTION.

His Accidental End

There are all sorts of ways of putting things, and some sound much better than others. For example, there is the case of the man of whom Lord Coleridge used to tell, whose father was hanged for highway robbery. Some one asked him how his father died. "Sir," said he "he fell from a scaffolding outside Newgate while he was talking to a clergyman."—Youth's Companion.

What Do You Think?

The following advertisement run by The Tinley Park Drug Store last week has received many compliments. We are reprinting it for it's "Trade At Home" message.

What Do You Think?

Do your Local merchants deserve your support? How do you feel about this most vital question?

The grocer, butcher, hardware, druggist and general store in your immediate community; would you miss them if they all closed their doors tomorrow?

I think you would.

You may save a few cents in some instances, by giving your daily business to the large syndicates of retail trade. But are you really. Sure, they will reduce the price on well known merchandise, but for every such article they have ten others pulling on your purse strings to take away from you the saving you made on your original purchase.

They know the weakness of human nature for the glittering tinsel of attractive merchandise. Bear this in mind in your own case and prove it to your self. If this is true, then these large syndicates of retail trade build their success upon the weakness of human nature. They pick out your weak and vulnerable spots and plunge the sword in to the hilt.

Who are the controlling figures of these large syndicates of retail trade? Use your own judgment. Are they in business with the best interests of their patrons at heart? They are not. They are there to get your last dime if they can get it.

How about your local independent merchant? He is there living among you, is one of you. His children go to school with your children. His wife visits with your wife and family. He is very closely interwoven with your social and everyday life.

In his business dealings with you, how is it possible to give you anything but sincere and honest service with your best interests at heart? If he did not, he would not last very long. His business is built on the solid foundation of human consideration and will endure.

Is it worth your while to patronize your local community merchants for your everyday needs? What do you think?

Mokena School News

Evelyn and Hobart Meyers who are in Mrs. Ferguson's room have just returned from a trip to California.

Monday, Evelyn gave a very enjoyable account of their journey and showed the pupils many interesting objects which she brought back.

The contestants in the Declamatory Contest have selected their pieces. The entries are as follows: Bernice Hostert, Edna Lorenz, Grace Moriarty, Oliver Lauffer and Eileen Walsh.

HEAH'N'THEAH

It is rumored that William Abbe is one of those big strong silent men in Eileen Walsh's opinion.

Who does Russel Nelson always expect to laugh at his jokes? What reward does Harold Balaz get from Marie Abbe for every basket he makes Margaret Mueller is now singing "I Wish I Had Someone to Love Me!" Kathryn's B. F. has a new car. Is she glad? Now she won't have to beware of broken springs. Alice Lauffer looks forward to these Glee Club meetings with a great deal of pleasure. The probable solution is that Maxwell Williams waits out side. Whom does Dorothy Hall give those endearing glances? Howard Jungles is "that way" about the brunette that sits in the last seat in the second row of the Freshman class. Bernice Hostert's Romeo is now driving taxi cabs in the windy city.

SPORTS

Friday night the Mokena Grade school boys played the Monee grade school boys at the home gym. The Mokena boys had a hard time getting started in the game. One man would grab the ball and shoot and miss it and about four other men would also shoot and miss. After the first quarter, the Mokena boys finally woke up and started sinking baskets right and left. Tierney and Yunker played an excellent game and pulled quite a few sleeper plays under the basket. Tierney and Yunker were High point men with 12 points. At the half the score was 12 to 14 in favor of Monee. At the end of the game, the score was 31-22 in favor of Mokena. The summary is as follows:

The same night the Mokena High School boys played the Monee High school. The Mokena boys were hotter than hot and made a basket on the first tip off. No sooner said than done, the boys had raised the score 16-3 before the first quarter. With Devlin's excellent following in after all shots and back passing it down the floor also the quick action of our forwards bringing the ball down the floor before you could say cat, enabled Mokena to make points one after the other. Jungles' short and long shots brought up a large total. Williams must have had a four leaf clover or rabbit's foot in his pocket as he made one basket right after the other. Williams was high point man with 18 points and Balaz next with 10 points. The score at the half was 24-7 in favor of Mokena. At the end of the game the score was almost two and a half times as large 57-20. The summary is as follows:

THE LIFE OF A MAN

A man comes into this world
Without his consent,
And leaves against his will.
During his stay here on earth,
His life is one round of contraries,
And misunderstanding.

In his infancy he's an angel,
In his boyhood he's a devil,
In his manhood he's everything
Crooked or on the level.

In his duties he's an awful fool,
If he raises a family he's a chump
If he raises a check he is a thief,
Then the law gets him.
If he's a poor man he is a poor
manager,
If he's rich he is dishonest.
But considered honest,
If he's in politics he's a grafter,
If he is not in politics you don't know him.

If he belongs to a church he is a hypocrite,
And if he doesn't he's a sinner.
If he donates for charity he does it
for show,
And if he doesn't he is stingy.

When he comes into this world
Everyone wants to kiss him,
Before he goes out
Everyone wants to kick him.
If he dies young he had a great future before him;
If he lives to a ripe old age he is in the way,
Only living to save funeral expenses.
Life is a puzzling proposition.

called on Mokena friends Monday.
Mr. Lynk left home Friday and ar-

He reports a heavy freeze which killed about fifty per cent of the orange and 95 per cent of the tanin 17 years. Smudge fires saved part of the fruit groves.

ing is extra good. The ocean is 75 miles from his home and recently he and a number of friends made a trip to the ocean and caught 110 pounds of fish which supplied 14 families with meat.

Rattlesnakes and the deadly poi-

Just the Thing for Little Lady

PATTERN 2065

It's no wonder this young lady looks puzzled—she probably doesn't know whether to stand the way she is and let us see the front of her snug wool bloomer dress, with its unusual closing and its inset of pleats for spirited striding, or to turn around so that we may admire that important "back interest" produced by the long smartly stitched pleat. Clever mothers will make up a plentiful supply of those trim little white collars and cuffs, for they know that nothing looks prettier on bright wool dresses. The bloomers, and long sleeves for those who prefer them, come with the pattern.

Pattern 2065 is available in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 6 takes 2½ yards 36-inch fabric and ¾-yard contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Supreme Court Has Last Word

Washington.—It is seldom that any genuine widespread interest is evidenced in decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States. Although that distinguished body of nine men holds in its hands power co-equal to that of the President and of congress, some way it has never been a part of the government to which attention has been directed nationally. Of course, there are more people who are not lawyers than who are familiar with laws and that may be the answer to the fact that the Supreme court can be said to be little known.

But it seems now that the court is to be a center of attraction just as interesting as either the executive or legislative branches. The reason is that the highest legal tribunal in the land has before it for decision some of the most momentous legal controversies to engage the country since the days of the Civil war. Through many months, questions concerning the New Deal, their legality and constitutionality, have been wending their slow, tortuous way through the lower courts, through the courts of appeals to the court of last resort under the structure which we know as our government.

One of these, as I reported to you previously, has already been decided. In that instance, the Supreme court by a vote of eight of the nine judges determined that President Roosevelt had gone beyond the powers accorded him under the Constitution in prohibiting export of oil from the state where it was recovered.

Within a very short time now the most important case of all affecting the New Deal will be decided. I refer to the so-called gold cases. Five questions are before the court and if it decides adversely to the government's claim on any of them, the monetary policy upon which the New Deal has been operating becomes virtually null and void. The court heard lengthy arguments by high powered lawyers on the part of the government and on the part of private citizens who claim that their rights have been abridged by the Roosevelt money policies and they naturally are seeking redress.

No one dares to make a prediction concerning pending action by the Supreme court. It can be only a guess at any time in advance of a rule by that group of men because with one or two exceptions since the nation was founded, its decisions have never leaked out ahead of the time they are formally handed down from the bench.

Lawyers throughout the land are watching and waiting for the court's findings. But the most fidgety of all lawyers are those in the government who recognize that an adverse decision by the court will flatten out the New Deal and force a wholesale revision of policies. I am told that this group of lawyers is none too certain of its ground. True, they made what is recognized as a strong argument in support of the government's position but the difficulty seems to be from their standpoint that the Constitution was written before the brain trust came into action and the Constitution itself provides the only ways by which it may be changed. Brain trust ideas, however good they may be, necessarily are worthless and useless if they contravene the basic provisions of the Constitution to which the nation adheres.

Among the questions before the Supreme court in the gold cases, that one brought forward by a suit to compel the government to pay gold in redeeming one of its own bonds is by far the most important. Indeed, that case can be said to have an overwhelming importance. If the court rules that the government cannot void its contract—for a bond is generally recognized as a contract—to pay back the borrowed money under the term named in that bond, then the seizure of gold by the government in 1933 likewise is voided. In other words, every person holding a government bond containing a promise to pay in gold is entitled to have that gold from the treasury. It takes no stretch of the imagination to see what effect that will have on the whole money program.

Likewise, if the court determines that an individual who has promised to pay in gold must observe the terms of that agreement, the administration is again in a hole. Since contracts, agreements or bonds containing the promise to pay in gold are in general use and have been written since time immemorial the amount of such payments is virtually incalculable. I have heard many estimates of the total amount of money involved by the so-called gold clause but I hesitate to use any of them because it is patent on the face of things that an accurate figure is impossible.

One can get down to brass tacks on the effect of affirmation of the gold clause, however, by the simple application of the ratio of gold to the present dollar. When those gold contracts were written a dollar in currency was redeemable for a dollar in gold. At that time gold was valued at around $21 an ounce. The Roosevelt administration arbitrarily increased that value to a few cents over $35 an ounce. Without going into all of the details it means that to gain the same amount of gold now which a dollar would have brought prior to the Roosevelt administration action one will have to pay $1.69. To state it another way, if the gold contracts involve $1,000,000,000, those who are obligated to pay in gold will have to pay $1,690,000,000 at the present rate. Obviously, debtors under that circumstance will find themselves between the upper and nether millstones, well squashed, if the court rules adversely to the government's policy.

Attorney General Cummings in his plea to the Supreme court made the argument that an adverse decision would mean chaos to the country. I believe there can be no doubt about that. But the point is deeper. Roosevelt administration policies were hammered through congress and received the legislative body's rubber stamp by direction of the President.

What is going to be done about it? I don't know. Further I don't believe the administration knows what it is going to do in event the court rules against the government in these cases. There have been numerous conferences, frequent speculations by subordinate officials and many guesses by individuals. The President himself said in a press conference the other day that he would not discuss the gold question while the matter was pending before the Supreme court. It was a simple way to avoid expressing his hopes or his fears.

It is to be noted, however, that during the ten days in which the court heard arguments in the gold cases, a considerable number of senators and representatives sat glued in their seats in the gloomy old Supreme court chamber under the dome of the Capitol. They were obviously wondering. None of them thus far has offered publicly a suggestion as to what he will do in event the monetary policies are overturned. After all, if the Roosevelt program is upset, congress simply will have to enact some new laws and that was the chief reason why so many of the congressional leaders were seen in attendance at court.

The court will rush its decision. Of that there can be no doubt. Always, it has put cases of paramount importance to the nation ahead of those that affect only a small number of private litigants. Everyone believes, therefore, that in this instance the Supreme court has laid aside most of its other work in order to devote its attention to a thorough-going examination of the present problems.

Lawyers tell me that if the court rejects the Roosevelt policies as untenable under the Constitution, congress will have to put through some new laws on the subject at break-neck speed in order to avoid a hiatus that would flood the courts with an unprecedented number of suits.

The agricultural adjustment administration has fixed the cotton crop for the coming season at 10,500,000 bales — the same as last year. At the same time, we have begun to hear talk in Washington of a plan to seek a world agreement restricting the output of cotton after the manner of the attempt to restrict the world production of wheat, a move that went exactly nowhere.

Determination of the same production for cotton in 1935 that was used as the base in 1934 is accepted as in line with the administration's plans for raising prices artificially through curtailment of production. It had been expected that the 1935 crop might be as high as 12,000,000 bales. But since the administration has decided to carry on further its experiment into artificial price raising fields by production limitation, some of the background of that policy and the American relationship to world conditions warrant examination.

The American production until a few years ago was about 60 per cent of the world's cotton output. Now it is down to about 43 per cent of the total. Last year, the world consumption of cotton, according to the Department of Commerce figures, declined by about 700,000 bales whereas the world consumption, excluding that used in the United States, increased by something over 1,300,000 bales. It is to be noted further that although American exports in general increased last year, the quantity of cotton shipped last year fell off by approximately 28 per cent.

For several years now, we have been hearing more and more of efforts by foreign nations to increase their cotton production. Brazil has been making a determined drive to develop cotton as a major product. Mexican cotton production has increased in a substantial way. Egyptian cotton production is on the increase. The British guidance has served to spur production of cotton in India and at the moment there is no sign of any slackening of the increase there. All of this is happening while our own southern cotton fields are being limited in their capacity to produce that staple commodity.

Lesson for February 3

PETER'S RESTORATION

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:17; Luke 24:34; John 20:1-10; John 21:1-19.
GOLDEN TEXT—He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. John 21:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Helped Peter Try Again.
JUNIOR TOPIC—What Peter Learned When He Failed.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Prove Our Love for Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Test of Loyalty.

As there were seven definite steps in Peter's downfall, so there are seven definite steps in his restoration. These steps in both his downfall and his restoration were most strikingly presented by G. Campbell Morgan at the Bible conference in Northfield in 1898.

I. Christ's Prayer for Peter (Luke 22:31, 32).

Little did Peter realize the testings through which he would be forced to pass. Christ revealed to him that Satan desired to have him to sift as wheat and informed him that he had already prayed for his abiding faith. We see thus that before Peter fell the Lord began the preparation for his reclamation. The Lord knew that soon he would have to announce to him that before the cock crew he would deny him thrice.

II. The Look of Jesus (Luke 22:61, 62).

This look was not one of contempt, but one, doubtless, filled with pity and pain. It revealed the heart of God. It brought to Peter the full consciousness of his cowardice and disloyalty and his blasphemous words of denial, while at the same time displaying Christ's love and pity.

III. Christ's Message Through the Women (Mark 16:7).

The Lord's message was "Go tell my disciples and Peter." Had the message merely been, "Go tell my disciples," Peter would have believed himself not included. The message indicated that Christ had particular consideration for him and loved him still. What new hope filled Peter's heart as he heard this message from the risen Lord is seen in his words: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet. 1:3).

IV. A Personal Interview With the Risen Lord (Luke 24:34).

The declaration is here made that the risen Lord had appeared to Simon. The nature of the conversation is hidden in mystery. It may be that the Lord reminded him of his boasting self-confidence, his warning himself at the enemies' fire and his blasphemy, but only to assure him of his unchanging love and that the Cross which he shunned was the very means of covering up his grievous sins (Luke 24:34; cf. John 20:1-10).

Peter's Open Confession of Love (John 21:11-17).

The disciples had gone back to their fishing. As they returned weary and hungry Christ invited them to breakfast. In connection with this ministry of providing food and warmth, Jesus, by skillful questions, induced Peter to confess him three times. A vital step in Peter's restoration was his professing anew his love for his Lord. What marvelous grace, that the one who had across the fire of the enemy denied his Lord should now across the fire prepared by the Lord thrice confess his love for his Lord.

VI. His Word Given Back (John 21:17, 18).

Instead of putting poor Peter on probation before giving him anything to do, he immediately brought him back into fellowship with his Lord in service. It was because Peter passed satisfactorily the examination and the Lord saw his real love for him that he permitted Peter to begin his work.

VII. Willingness to Suffer for Christ (John 21:18, 19).

While Peter had now openly confessed Christ and had received at the Lord's hands his work, he needed to be made willing to drink the bitter cup of suffering for his Lord. Jesus made it clear to him that he was to follow his Lord in crucifixion. He was now willing to suffer the shame of the cross for the glory of God. Peter, with the other disciples, later counted it joy that they were counted worthy to suffer (Acts 5:41). It was the Cross of Christ over which Peter blundered. After his restoration his greatest happiness was to suffer for Christ's sake.

Meekness is more than the absence of self-assertion; it is the manifestation of the mighty power of God. One of the chief values of a noble friendship is that it keeps one living at his best.

The soul's discovery of God is the greatest moment in the life of any man!

Meekness is more than the absence of self-assertion; it is the manifestation of the mighty power of God. One of the chief values of a noble friendship is that it keeps one living at his best.

NATURAL FLAVOR OF FOOD SHOULD BE BROUGHT OUT

Food sometimes tastes appetizing or flat according to the skill of the cook in preserving natural flavors and aromas in cooking. Food manufacturers and processors make this point a matter of research for their chemists. The question should be of equal importance to every home cook. Unfortunately many think of food flavor as something added by means of seasonings or sauces, rather than an inherent quality to be brought out by skillful handling.

"The first point I would emphasize is the care foods received before cooking," says Dr. Florence B. King of the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture. "Delay between gathering and use permits enzyme action or chemical changes to take place, affecting the natural flavor. For many vegetables and fruits the fresher the better. If stored, the temperature should be low enough to check the action of enzymes. The noticeable change in sweet corn is due to the chemical change in the sugar, which soon becomes starch, within a few hours after picking the corn."

"When the good flavor of a food is dependent on volatile oils, as in coffee, care in handling to prevent the escape of flavor and aroma is particularly necessary."

"In general the cook needs to avoid methods that change, destroy, or dilute natural flavor, and use instead those that retain or develop it. It is easy to overcook cabbage, and make it strong and unpleasant. The same is true of other vegetables. Those cooked in too much water lose flavor that is drained down the sink. The finest flavor results in a few vegetables and fruits from cooking them in their 'jackets.' Other vegetables are best in flavor if cooked in the least possible water for the shortest time needed to make them tender.

"In roasting meats the important thing is to develop flavor by controlling the temperature of the oven and the time of cooking. Foods containing starch or sugar undergo changes which affect flavor advantageously and the clever cook uses this fact. Old-fashioned creamy rice pudding is a good example of developing flavor in two otherwise bland foods —milk and rice—by a method of cooking. Browning flour for gravy is another instance of developed flavor."

First Formal Republic

On January 14, 1639, occurred the adoption of the first written constitu-world. This event took place at Hartford, Conn., and was the first formal republic made up of people of three early towns in the valley.

Right or Wrong Direction?

There is no use for us to ask anxiously if our power is increasing.
There is no doubt of that. The only question is whether it is increasingly good or increasingly evil.—Amos R.

FOOD TALKS

Appearing regularly in this paper

Miss Barber does more than simply help you with that hard job of planning three meals every day in the year.
She helps you plan these meals in such a way that the food served not only will be palatable but will provide a proper and well-balanced diet. Her recipes and articles on nutrition constitute one of the most valuable features that you will find in these columns. Call them to the attention of your friends for they have the same problem that confronts you every day.

Folly of Fashion

"So great was the weight of the elaborately padded garments worn by men in England during the reign of Henry the Eighth," points out Frederick Tisdale in an article in Liberty,
"that a bench was built along the house of parliament so the fainting dandies could rest their matted thighs."

King's Death Warrant

The original warrant for the execution of Charles I is in the library of the house of lords. It was prepared by Colonel Harker after the Restoration, and was the evidence upon which those who had signed it were excepted from the indemnity act.
